

A scientist and a priest travel to rural Louisiana to investigate the case of a boy's apparent possession. The boy is just an average American teenager, until he drops his skateboard—just before it sinks into some gooey stuff leaking from the ground. Somehow, he can skate over the goo without fear of getting his board stuck. This is not your average "possessed" kid... What follows is a heart-stopping race against time as they try to solve the mystery of what might be affecting this young man and why others in town are exhibiting strange behavior including suicide, vandalism and self-mutilation. As the two of them dig deeper, they encounter increasing hostility and eventually learn that the town's demonic underground is involved – and this is just the first step in a larger plan to bring hell on earth. The film was released on January 15, 2010 in the United Kingdom and it opened at number 3 on its opening weekend behind "Avatar" and "I Love You, Man". It performed below expectations. Warners has also dropped the film's trailer citing that they are too graphic for audiences to see. The film was poorly received by critics, with only eight reviewers giving it "fresh" ratings out of 29 included on Rotten Tomatoes.
